Speaker:

Daniel Hjorth, Copenhagen Business School, Denmark, and Nottingham Business School, the UK
Editor-in-chief, Organization Studies

Purpose of the Workshop

The experience from many years serving as Senior Editor and then Editor-in-Chief at Organization Studies, and from being a member of Editorial Review Boards for several other journals, will be used for this Workshop as we tackle the question of how to publish well-crafted papers that galvanize our field. Such papers are crucially important within our academic “ecosystem” of management and organization journals, where they foster new ways of thinking and (re)direct lines of research. A particular focus will be paid to the theoretical contribution made by papers.

The purpose of this Workshop is therefore to help participants better understand the expectations regarding publishing a paper (with particular emphasis on making a theoretical contribution), and building on those expectations, help participants gain a good grasp of the different ways in which papers for a journal such as Organization Studies can be written. The first part of the workshop features a plenary session on writing and publishing journal papers, a discussion of common issues and expectations regarding a theoretical contribution. We will then in the second part of the workshop discuss participants’ particular questions and/or concrete challenges related to work-in-progress.

Application guidelines

The workshop mainly targets early career researchers and doctoral students. We particularly encourage scholars who have not yet written theory papers for Journal Publication (particularly Organization Studies).

Everyone interested in this workshop is invited to apply; however, priority will be given to scholars in earlier stages of their careers.
